“ The beauty of a soul mate is that they will always be connected to you, in every way shape and form, beyond this lifetime you will meet again in ways we can't even begin to imagine. In this body, through these eyes, we experience what we perceive as "our" life. But in the bigger picture we are just seeing it from one perspective of encounter, at this moment. collectively we experience this life from different perspectives each go around. Ultimately there is no separation. But in this current lifespan, there remains a theme of loss, loneliness, and a gap that can not be filled for what seems to be lifetimes. Soul mates will always meet again. Through different eyes, different bodies, and what we perceive as time. The unseen truth is that time is the illusion, all things are happening simultaneously. When you start to feel emptiness, just remember we are beings of pure light. That transcends all other time and space. And you as well, one day, will transcend this shell. Focus on your lessons of today. You chose to come here and have these experiences, learn the most from them. Try not to get too lost in the emptiness. You are loved in so many ways, by all souls you encounter, present and absent.

“ Sadly, I will not be able to make the celebration of life gathering today, but I will be with you all in thought and prayer. I wish that I had time to get to know Animal better. He always went out of his way to welcome me and treat me like a good friend. Nobody shines their love light like Animal did. Every time I got to see him play my heart was filled with joy and I was moved to smile and dance. He will be greatly missed, but that sweet joyous spirit that he so generously shared with all of us will remain. Love to Casey, the family, and all who love him. -Kristin Hamilton

“ Saw the band in Omaha a few months ago having never heard of them, and it was one of the best shows I've seen in quite a long time (I even bought their disc I enjoyed it so much). Animal was such a huge part of the magnetism in the room, a natural performer and one helluva bassist. My deepest sympathy for your loss.

“ I love you Brad. I will always love you~

You died in my arms on the afternoon of July 5th. You were fighting for your life for weeks and I was fighting right by your side non stop. Neither of us expected it to come so soon. The most difficult thing in the world was having to let you go. Your spirit was strong but your body was failing. It was beyond our control and neither of us ever liked to not have control. I did everything in my power to try to heal you, give you comfort and ease the worry from your mind. I know you did everything you could to hang on to keep from leaving me behind. When I told you that it was ok to let go and find peace, I could barely say the words- but I knew that you needed to hear them. you needed release from the pain. I felt your spirit leave your body and I knew you were finally free of the mental and physical pressure weighing on you. I wanted to fly away with you. We always said we would launch off together.

Being here without you is agonizing. Everything has gone flat. Life has no luster. I know it is my turn to save my life by keeping myself healthy and not wither into nothingness. I hope you felt me by your side and heard my final words to you. I felt your strong heart beat for the last time. Your lips moved and you took a few more breaths. I wrapped myself around you and held you until the warmth left your body. Our closest friends were here and came to your side to say goodbye.

I called the funeral home we chose and the nurse helped me clean and dress you. Frank and Rick helped me choose your clothes. I placed your wedding rings on your right hand and quickly moved them to your left- common Casey nervous goof. I asked that they not remove them. I wanted them to go with you. The last clothing you ever wore was your Winfield shirt, your new blue pj bottoms that I just bought you the day before, and your blue converse with the mighty f-holes. Even in death, you were incredibly beautiful. I could not look away from you.

The funeral director came and we discussed details. The room was cleared and you were placed on a gurney and covered in a red shroud. We all lined the sidewalk and reached out to say one last goodbye as you were taken to the vehicle and driven out of sight. I later spoke with the funeral director about donating your lungs and heart to give someone the chance for transplant you never had.

I pick up your ashes today. I called the funeral home yesterday to check on you. I know I sounded like a crazy person. I could not find the words. I think I choked out that I missed you and would like to collect your remains as soon as possible. I know that you will not be in that box except in the physical sense, but the fact that your remains are in a stranger's possession keeps me awake at night. Today will bring me both pain and relief, but keep me grounded in reality,

Our family of friends have planned a celebration of your life this Saturday. Ricky offered to host the event to allow space for as many people as possible. Leigh is assisting in getting the event planned online. There will be music, food, laughter and endless Animal stories shared.

In the next 2 weeks, I am going home to Louisiana for 2 days. Fred has offered to make the trip with me and the kids have decided to go as well. Steve will be coming from Houston. I had lengthy & positive conversation with him today. It was nice to have a father show concern and want to be there. I really love and appreciate him for that. We are going to have a short family memorial. Very short list: Margie, Ashley, Brett, Janet, Steve, me & the kiddos. We are presenting your mother with a silver keepsake locket with a small amount of your ashes. Afterwards, Fred & I will travel down to NOLA and scatter your ashes in a sacred place. I will make arrangements to have my remains delivered to the same spot when the time comes.

My love for you never ends~
